SETTING UP YOUR Online Dating Profile

Online dating platforms

It's never been this easy to search for a romantic partner! Can you imagine people looking for romantic partners before the internet using videocassettes and publications with personal ads? Yes, you read it right! Those were the platforms that preceded online dating sites. But presently, with the help of technology and innovation, all you need is an excellent online dating profile—one that will entice anyone's attention!

Remember to choose your online dating site wisely to make sure you can connect with other users with the same intent of looking for a potential partner for a long term relationship. Other platforms are designed for hookups, while others match romantically compatible people, like TrulyAfrican.

Register your email on the online dating site

Just like social media, online dating sites will ask for your necessary information to create your profile. Hop on to any online dating sites on your mobile phone and sign up for an account. Fill out the basic information needed, like your first and last name, email address, password, and the country you're residing in. You will use the email and password you entered for login purposes, so make sure you keep them secure.

Ensure that you enter accurate information as this is important and will be the basis in determining your match preference.

Add a profile picture

Once you've signed up for an account, you can start creating a good profile! The first thing to do is add a profile picture. Pick a picture of yourself that is simple and attractive and one that precisely mirrors your actual appearance. Do not use dummy pictures, overly edited photos, or images that purposefully hide your features. It might be tempting to use applications to alter or make an unreasonable picture of yourself to attract potential partners, but it is best to be true to yourself and your matches. Eventually, you will be meeting these potential partners in person, and it would dismay them if they find out you're not what you look like in your pictures.

Show off your tagline

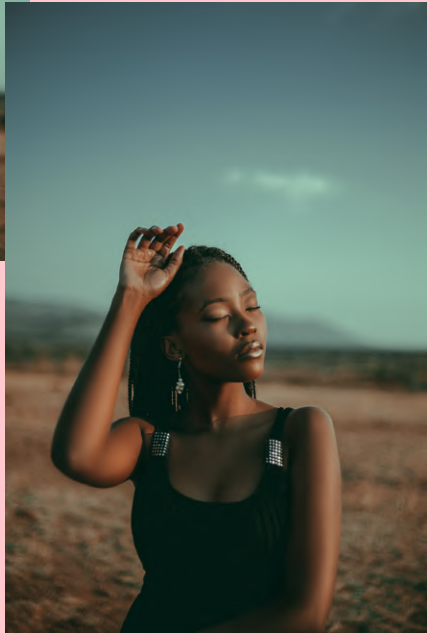

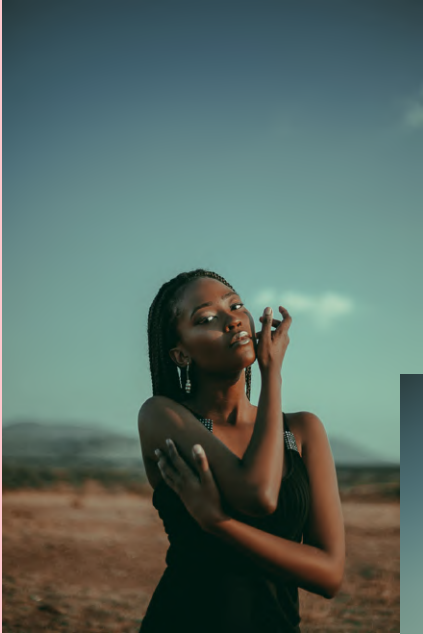

A short and exciting tagline will help your profile stand out to potential partners. You can choose from a favorite book quotation, a line from a good film, or simply an expression that characterizes you.

Complete your profile

By completing your profile, you tell them about yourself. Show off your personality and focus on the most important aspects so you can get matches that share similar interests as you. Tell them about your hobbies and interests, what you like to do for fun, and what you're looking for. People on online dating sites don't read essays, so an in-depth description of yourself is unnecessary. Just be truthful, and keep it brief and straightforward.

If other users have the same interests as you, then you'll catch their attention and match with you. This is where conversations start, and you can try to get to know each other by sharing your interests.

You can also add more photos of yourself to attract more potential matches. Upload a headshot photo of you to emphasize your facial features and a lifestyle photo to showcase your hobbies and interests.

HOW TO IMPRESS

Botswana Single Ladies

Impressing Botswana ladies is not hard! If you've already matched with some of the women in Botswana who have the same faithful intentions as you, below are a few tips that we can share to help you in dating Botswana ladies.

Be spontaneous

As you know, Botswana is a land of delight and spontaneity. This character is also shown in the gorgeous, stunning women of Botswana. They need a man who will prepare a date in unique places and who can try to be different from the other men they've known. To succeed in dating Botswana ladies, always have a trick or two at your disposal. Try not to be a nitpicker to one path because that would only be repetitive. Have fun and be spontaneous!

She's your Queen

Regardless of their profession or social standing, ladies also long to be spoiled, be taken out on dates, and be told how beautiful they look. Always compliment her and make her feel special. It will help her understand your true intentions.

Tell her what you're looking for

Be bold and let her know what you are searching for. On the off chance that you are searching for a one-night stand or a no-strings-attached kind of relationship, make sure to say so at the beginning.

On the flip side, if you are searching for a long term relationship and marriage partner, tell her. That way, if your intentions don't match, each can head out on a different path to find something that will make them happy.

Visit her in Botswana

After chatting with her and building a relationship on the online dating site, the time has come for you to visit her in Botswana. You will adore it, and you enjoy seeing the dazzling Botswana scenery. In their culture, it is respectful and honorable for you to visit the woman first. Meet her family and friends, and in particular, see whether you genuinely love each other.

While you're there, you can plan for her to visit you the next time so that she can meet with your friends and family too. That is if you have chosen to take things to the next level in your relationship.

Go on a dinner date

This is one more of the things you genuinely need to consider when you are dating a Botswana lady. On the off chance that you pick the club for the first date, you can be confident that she won't show up. In a woman's mind, when you try to take her to a club on a first date, there is a sexual desire behind your action, and in most cases, there usually is.

Women love it if you take them out to a nice and simple restaurant. It doesn't have to be costly. As long as you are spending the night together in a serene place with good food to eat, rather than a noisy club with drunk people and the smell of alcohol, that's all that matters. Take her out, have a nice dinner date at the Mokolodi Restaurant, engage in smart conversations, and get to know each other.

BE AWARE OF Online Dating Scammers

Exploring the online dating world can be a fun and exciting approach to meet romantic partners. However, you may quickly find that a few things are off and are not what they appear to be when you chat with certain online dating sites' profiles. The unpleasant generalization about other people on online dating sites is that many are scammers looking to go after foreign men's weaknesses and take advantage of them for cash. Although it is one of the quickest ways for single individuals to meet one another and build strong connections, certain individuals use the platforms for deceptive purposes.

Considering this, we've arranged this rundown of some of the most common online dating red flags and scams that have been recently uncovered. These hints may allude that the individual on the other end of a profile may be deceitful and dishonest:

Strong affections after only a couple of chats

After matching with someone on an online dating site and after only a couple of conversations, they assert strong feelings and affection for you. Sometimes, they would ask to meet with you in a secluded place too. Somebody who demands meeting you in a secluded place doesn't have a lot of regard for your wellbeing and security, regardless of whether they mean you any mischief.

Insists on taking the conversation to another platform

Once they attempt to request to communicate with them on another platform like social media or personal email, that is a red flag right there. Someone genuine with their intentions would not mind conversing with you on the online dating site where you initially met. Keep in mind that scammers request to take communication on another platform so they can gather your contact information and personal details. Always be vigilant as they can utilize your data and pictures to make a false identity, or they can also blackmail you.

Inconsistent information

The biggest tell that you're talking to a scammer is when information on their online dating profile does not match with the information that they tell you. An example is if they try to describe themselves to you through chat messages, and the profile picture does not match their description.

Rushing things

Their messages are often constructed insufficiently and usually take things hurriedly from introduction to professing their love for you. When you meet with someone on an online dating site who is sincere about their intentions, it will take time to get to know you and build a strong connection. Falling in love with someone you've never met overnight is just absurd.

Asking for money

After you have lowered your guards and completely trust them, they will try to play with your emotions by telling you a compelling and personal story about them. Once they get your empathy, they will attempt to subtly ask you for money, gifts, or even your credit card information. If you don't send them money right away, trust that their messages and calls will become more desperate and forceful. And once you send them some money, expect that they will be asking for more. Never send money to anyone you meet on an online dating site.

WHAT TO DO WHEN YOU

Suspect You're Being Scammed

Never send cash

If someone you've never met before, especially on online dating sites, is asking for money, never send them money. Because if you do, they will just keep requesting it from you.

Cross-check their information

Always be aware of the stories that they tell you. You can do an online background check and make sure if this information is correct or inconsistent. If you find out that they have been telling you conflicting stories, block them right away.

Be cautious

Be cautious when sharing personal photographs or videos with potential partners, especially if you've never met them yet. Scammers are known to coerce their victims by using things that can compromise their well being. They can also use this to create a false identity and scam other people.

Communicate only within the online dating site

Make sure to stay in contact only within the online dating platform. Unless you already have a reason to trust the person or have already met them, we highly suggest against taking your conversation to another platform like social media or personal email. The online dating site you met should have security protocols for users who breach their terms of service.

Report and block the profile

On the off chance that you think you have been scammed, report it to the online dating site or application where the scammer connected with you initially. Let them know the scammer's profile name and whatever other data you may have that can help them to blacklist this profile and prevent others from encountering the same experience. After reporting the profile, proceed in blocking them so that they can no longer get in touch with you. In the event that you think you have given your credit card information to a scammer, connect with your bank immediately. Online dating and matching should be about building connections and relationships, so always be careful!

In conclusion, love does not have to be complicated. Shoot your shot when finding for the love of your life on online dating sites. Just keep in mind to always be careful, and never share personal and bank information especially when warning signs of a scammer are present. So what are you waiting for?
